

A Word Or 2

“Our own Black nation, the Republic of New Afrika, is Our only Real solution”

R U S S I A

Sometime around the year 2000, I published a book entitled “Playing Black Cheap.” In that book I included an essay that I had published 20 or so years earlier entitled “Europe: White America’s Roots! Should Black People Really Want to Integrate With White People?” In that essay I did a very brief summary of each of Europe’s most powerful countries, and made two points about Russia that resulted in some smart individuals accusing me of being poorly informed and ignorant. The first point I made about Russia was that it was never a communist country. The second point was that Russia had never become a legitimate world power.

I just shrugged off the negative responses because I have to do that frequently: I understand the shortcomings of people who go deep into an educational system before they have mastered the ability to independently think about and analyze what they are being and/or have been taught by teachers, professors and doctors who are products of corrupted scholarship. I entered that educational environment, but never allowed myself to be victimized by it or converted into one of its blinded disciples. I knew that Lenin wanted to convert Russia into a communist country, but I also knew that Lenin was dead barely two years after he assumed power, that no significant political or social change can secure itself in so short a time, and that Stalin, Lenin’s replacement, did not possess any communist leanings. As a result, even as Russia maintained the communist exterior, it effectively moved from its monarchial structure to a state capitalism structure. I also knew that, even as late as the so-called cold war, Russia had not put the pieces in place that enable a country to take on the role of a legitimate. Russia could talk the talk, but Russia could not walk the walk unless it was an easy path to traverse.

A few hours after I published the essay, Russia invaded Afghanistan without the support system in place that was needed to impose its will, so the Afghani warriors were able to put a hurting on Russia and get away with it. The Afghani people had learned the lesson Viet Nam had taught the world— that a nation that does not surrender can be devastated but it can not be defeated.

A few years after that word began to leak about the lavish lifestyle enjoyed by Russia’s richest citizens. Lavish rich citizens? That’s not what communism is about at all.

And now comes the invasion of Ukraine. The failure of an adequate support system again raises its ugly head, but even more telling is the lack of efficiency that just jumps out at you. A legitimate world power has to operate efficiently; it doesn’t have to always get its way, but it has to carry out its operations efficiently.

So the reality of Russia has been exposed for anyone who wants to see. Will the Russians succeed in its war against Ukraine? Who knows? I think that what Russia gains from it will be less than what Russia loses, but time will tell. From my point of view, the most important development to come out of Russia’s invasion of Ukraine is that Germany is going into war mode again. All of the Europeans have been some lowlifes for as long as history can remember, but none were lower and more militaristic and barbaric than the Germans, who were also the most efficient. The Europeans feared the German fighters more than anyone else. They know there is something about the Germans that will not let them act like civilized people for long. Probably sooner instead of later, the Germans will start feeling their cheerios again, and all hell is probably going to break loose.

Black People in the USofA are New Afrikans
Unfortunately, We have all but lost the battle for the minds of Blacks in the USofA. It’s to the point where continuing to wage a defensive battle is useless; We can only regain the minds that are Ours by going on the offensive. Part of that offensive posture should be putting more time and effort into making all of Us aware of the importance of Us identifying as New Afrikans. For that reason we are encouraging people to make use of a 5 second slogan that states the following: “We are Black People. Say it loud, New Afrikan and Proud.” What it does is connect Our Blackness and Our New Afrikan nationality. It is easy to remember because it revives James Brown’s song from years ago. Additionally, it does not require any Black person to change his or her beliefs or hopes for Black People unless they prefer to identify nationally with the USofA. So do as much as you can to help us expand Sisters’ and Brothers’ understanding of who they are and who We are.

Help Spread the Word
We are Black People!
Say It Loud!
New Afrikan and Proud!
